“ Lee was a good friend and a great mentor to my fledgling farming activities. To this day I still cut hay and "lay it out in a wide swath so it will dry quicker" as he so wisely advised me years ago.

One time I was leaving his place after some haying activities. As I started to pull my tractor out on a busy highway he came running up along side reminding me to turn on my hazard flashers. Since then I have never driven a tractor on any road without turning on the flashers. It's difficult to know for sure, but his concern may have saved my life on some occasions.
